After navigating the challenges of a global pandemic, the beginning of a new academic year brings hope and promise for what we can accomplish together.

In this month’s letter, Dean Geer shares how the A&S community plans to continue pursuing our mission of learning, discovery, and service during the 2021-2022 academic year to solve the most pressing problems facing society.

Hopes for a New Academic Year

As we begin the fall semester, A&S faculty and students reflect on the trials of the last year and look ahead with promise to the year ahead.

Vanderbilt honors James Lawson with new institute on nonviolent movements

Researchers derive new cancer therapies to decrease the risk of heart damage

Pre-election polls in 2020 had the largest errors in 40 years

The buzz on Vanderbilt's bees

MORE NEWS

Inverse: The future of cosmology is 239,000 million miles away - but closer than ever

National Geographic: Ice Age mammoth's life story reconstructed in stunning detail

WYNC: Iconic at 50: Marvin Gaye's 'What's Going On'

PBS: On LGBTQ+ Equal Pay Day, the U.S. still doesn't know the size of the wage gap

Smithsonian Magazine: Human Remains From the Chilean Desert Reveal Its First Farmers Fought to the Death

SEE MORE

Welcome Back, Students!

This month, the College of Arts and Science welcomed students back to campus, and we are thrilled to be able to engage, inspire, and learn with them in our classrooms again this fall.

SUPPORT A&S

A&S is on social media!

It’s your College. Stay connected.