Intro to AJC

FALL 2015
VICTOR CALDERON
What is AJC?

- “Astronomy Journal Club”.
- Good practice for giving scientific talks.
- Slightly more specialized than a colloquium talk.
- First-year students are exempt the 1st semester.

Make sure you’re on the AJC and Physics-Astronomy lists:

- PHYS_AJC@LIST.VANDERBILT.EDU
- PHYS_ASTRO@LIST.VANDERBILT.EDU

- If not, talk to Don Pickert (SC 6301) or donald.pickert@vanderbilt.edu
When and where?

- Every Wednesday at 12pm.
- Here, at SC 6333
The Astronomy Group is a part of the Department of Physics & Astronomy at Vanderbilt University. Both theoretical and observational research is carried out at Vanderbilt, with the work carried out at various national, international and space-platform facilities. In addition, Vanderbilt helps operate the KELT survey for transiting extrasolar planets, and members of the group are active participants in the Kepler and SDSS collaborations, as well as preparing for future large-scale projects like TESS and LSST. The on-campus ACCRE cluster, with over 4000 CPUs, provides the resources for computational astrophysics.

Guidelines

- Aim for 40-50 minutes + Questions
- Keep your audience in mind.
- Be really familiar with the topic.
- Introduce the topic and explain why it is important
  - Use figures and plots, if possible.
- Explain what the “big picture” is.
- Close with a short summary and ready to answer questions
Guidelines

- DO’s:
  - Topic beyond a specific sub-field of astronomy
  - Know all the major points of the paper
  - Provide background to the topic
  - Nice graphics.
  - Practice your talk.
  - Be ready for questions.

- DON’Ts:
  - Review Papers
  - Too many equations in one slide
  - Too much jargon
  - Exceed your allotted time.
Finding a topic

- Talk about your research
- Talk about someone else’s research
